HISTORY

795 When the Vikings landed they were some of the earliest residents and made Temple Bar the centre of Dublin.

1673 The earliest record of Temple Bar on a map.

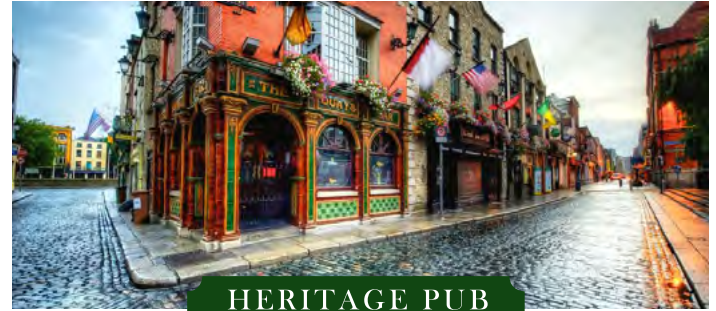

1707 The Custom House was built in Temple Bar making the area the centre of Trade and Commerce in Ireland – today U2's hotel The Clarence stands in its place.

1816 The iconic Ha'Penny Bridge was erected to replace a ferry crossing, made by Harland and Wolf - who also built the Titanic! Don't let that worry you, thousands of people cross over the Ha'Penny bridge every day to get into Temple Bar and it still stands today!

1991 A government owned transport company started to buy up property in Temple Bar, hoping to build a giant bus depot in the centre of the city, while they waited for planning permission buildings were rented out to artists, painters, sculptors and musicians at cheap rents. They formed a bohemian community and cafés, boutiques, record shops and bars began to spring up in what was now known as Dublin's alternative strip. Protests of the community led to the cancellation of the bus depot. Hurray!

The regeneration of Temple Bar began. Today Temple Bar is home to over 50 cultural centres, as well as boutiques, cafés, restaurants and bars. A huge amount of the businesses here are family owned and run. Temple Bar is a thriving community.
